HUNDREDS AT TINLEY CATHOLIC CHURCH SERVICE

Impressive ceremonies marked the dedication of the St. George Catholic church in Tinley Park last Sunday.

Fifteen priests from Chicago churches took part in the dedication services. The procession started from the residence of Mayor Francis A. Harper and concluded at the portals of the church. Following dedicatory services the doors of the edifice were opened and a great throng quickly filled the edifice and an overflow crowd remained on the outside of the church doors. A new pipe organ was played for the first time with a special organist from Chicago in charge.

The choir massed in the rear of the altar and screened from view of the congregation by a panel sang during the elaborate ceremony which extended from 11 am. to 1 pm.

The Very Rev. Wm. D. O'Brein of Chicago delivered the dedicatory sermon in the course of which he called especial attention to the deplorable state of affairs at home and abroad. He laid special emphasis on the moron and sex crimes of today and took a sharp rap at the Nazi attitude toward religion in Germany. He further showed how all the unrest and strife of the present day at home and abroad is due to lack of religion and the breaking away of the public from worship in the church and at home. He made it plain that the church is the center of the religious life of the community and pointed out that the only way in which civilization can be saved from chaos is by the people returning to the church and by having religion in their hearts.

The ceremonies attending the dedication were deeply impressive, but even more so were those commemorating the 20th anniversary of Rev. J. J. Boyle as a priest.

The various visiting priests presented Father Boyle with $3100 in cash with which to carry on his church work in Tinley Park.

It has been only a few years ago that Father Boyle came to Tinley Park to start a Catholic church. At first services were held in the Saenger hall.

The present church site at one time was the old Tinley Park public school. After the new school was built the old school house was converted into a community hall and was leased for a time to the local Legion Post and the RNA. Following the expiration of their leases, Father Boyle was instrumental in securing this building for the St. George Catholic church. His loyal parishioners made it possible for him to carry on and the little church steadily grew in numbers and also in strength until now the little edifice is filled to capacity each Sunday at Mass. Father Boyle is beloved by his parishioners and it is the expressed hope that within another five years a parish house and a parochial school can be erected.

Following the stirring and colorful dedication services which it is understood are the same as those used in dedicating a great cathedral, a sumptuous turkey dinner was served to 300 guests in the church parlors at $1 per plate. The turkeys for this elaborate feed were donated by Swift & Co. In all $3400 were realized for the St. George church.

The many friends of Father Boyle congratulate him on his success in building up such a fine parish and the parish is likewise to be congratulated on having such an outstanding and energetic leader as Father Boyle has proved to be.

Tinley Days of '49 Featuring Many Special Attractions

The big Tinley Park Roundup, sponsored by the Civic Club, to be held October 16 and 17, holds forth a series of attractions for two full days which have never been duplicated in Tinley Park or the surrounding country. The very nature of this gala event, its unique background and romantic and interesting atmosphere has struck the cord of public approval, almost immediately. The demand for tickets has been exceptionally heavy. The second thousand are now on the press and will be ready for distribution within the next few days.

Judging from the demands, so far, for costumes and the deposits already paid in, it looks like at least half of Tinley Park's population will be in costume for these two big days.

Twenty horsemen in full frontier dress and a Wildwest show in complete regalia will constitute the outside attractions for these two days.

For the evenings, the fun will continue in Saenger Hall. The entire hall will be decorated to conform with the frontier environment. Bar room will be operated by Diamond Jim Brady in typical western style. Short acts of vaudeville will be put on at regular intervals throughout the evening for the entertainment of the guests.

Refreshments will be served at the tables for patrons by waiters in appropriate frontier costume. Hosts of historical characters of the old West will be there to greet you.

A complete old time Punch and Judy show will be a part of the hall attractions with a continuous performance for the entire two days.

A marvelous time is in store for all and everybody should plan to attend.

Tickets for admission to the hall are only a wee bite. All financial benefits derived will be used for local improvements.

159th St. To Be Repaired

The state highway department is preparing to repair 159th street east from the Wabash railroad crossing. The highway has several bad dips in it due to the highway settling. The road was built over a turf bed and it is understood that soundings 30 feet deep have disclosed no solid bottom.

It is understood that piles will be driven down until a solid bottom is reached. The turf will be taken out and stone dumped in until a solid bed is assured and then the pavement will be relaid.

Signs have been put up detouring 159th street traffic over Wolf road and Southwest highway.

AGED TINLEY MAN FOUND SHOT DEAD

Mr. Boerner, Sr., aged 78 years, a long time and widely known resident of Tinley Park was found shot to death in his home in Tinley Park by his grandson at about 8:30 a. m. last Friday. The aged man had been living alone since his wife died about ten years ago.

His son Albert lives next door and every day some member of the family would look after the aged man's wants. Friday morning his grandson came over to see if he could run a store errand and was greatly shocked to find his grandfather lying on the floor with a bullet in his head. In his right hand the revolver was still clutched. Ill health is thought to have caused the deed.

Funeral services were held from the late home Sunday afternoon and were very largely attended. Burial was made in the Tinley Park cemetery.

Mr. Boerner was engaged in the carpenter trade until the infirmities of age compelled him to retire.

WITH BANNERS

Memory slashed into her self-congratulation. Mrs. Gregory had witnessed a will a week before Mrs. Dane had died. Where was it? Should she go to Jed Stewart at once and tell him what she had heard? But he knew. He had asked Mrs. Gregory to say nothing about it. Why hadn't he told her? What did it all mean? It gave her a panicky feeling, as if she were wandering blindly in the dark on the edge of a precipice. She poked the fire vigorously. It was a physical outlet to her turmoil of mind.

"Take care, Miss, or you'll set the chimney afire," Henri warned from the threshold.

"I think not. It was thoroughly cleaned when I came here to live."

Why was he puttering? He was drawing the hangings over the windows, pulling a rug in place, refolding the morning newspaper on the desk, fussing about the parrot's cage, a parrot who had lost half of his tail and all his self-assurance since his excursion into the outer world.

He cleared his throat and drew long bony fingers over his slack mouth.

"I—I've been wanting a chance to talk with you since—since we—found the parrot, Miss."

He was avoiding mention of the tragedy at the filling-station. Why?

"What have you to say to me?"

He drew his fingers across his mouth. "It's about that—what happened at the filling station. You know I went to the movies that evening, came home and went to bed. Miss Lucette and the others saw me when I came down to find out what the noise was I heard. You know that after that I dressed and went out to hunt for the parrot, that I brought him in with me, but the police want to check up on me every minute. You can help me very much, Miss."

"How?"

"By swearing that I was in this house at the time of the robbery at the filling station."

"But, as I remember it, you weren't, Henri. You said that you were hunting for the parrot."

The butler emitted a sound like the snarl of a savage beast at bay.

"You'd better say I was, Miss, or—or I'll tell how I found this in your desk." He drew a folded paper from his pocket.

"Mr. Sam has overlooked grand dramatic material right here, Henri. You would steal the show as the villain in his comedy. Just what is 'this'?" Her voice was tinged with amused disbelief.

"Take it, Miss."

Brooke thought of the fangs of a wolf as he smiled his secretive smile. She unfolded the paper and noticed that a tiny corner of the sheet was missing. Mary Amanda Dane's writing! Mrs. Gregory's signature! Henri's. Clotilde's. Was it the will of which Mrs. Gregory had spoken only a few moments ago? How had it come in Henri's possession?

"You say you found this in my desk?"

The butler's greedy eyes glittered like black beads. "Yes, Miss. I'm prepared to swear to that in court unless we can come to terms."

"Why didn't you take it directly to Mr. Trent or Mr. Stewart?" Was her voice as icy as her body felt?

"I thought it was too bad to do that until I found out if you and I couldn't work together. Mr. Mark tried to get me in wrong with the old madame. Hatred flamed in his eyes and voice. 'Why should I help him?'"

"Will this—this—help him?"

"Read it, Miss."

"I'll wait until I'm alone. The paper is torn. Did you tear it when you—pulled it from my desk?"

Henri's teeth showed between suddenly pallid lips.

"I—I—didn't pull it, Miss. I—I took it careful."

The last word was a whisper. What was there about a torn corner of a sheet of paper to terrify him?

"I'll talk with you about it later, Henri; perhaps—perhaps, as you suggest, we may be able to work together."

"I thought you might see it that way, Miss, but—don't take too long."

Brooke stood rigid, listening until she heard the door to the china closet swing. Curious how she had come to know every sound in this house which had been hers for so short a time. Hers! Was it hers? What was in the paper which Henri would swear he had found in her desk? She had pretended to consider his proposition that they work together merely to get time to decide what she should do.

She raced up the stairs, switched on the light in her boudoir, locked the door behind her.

She spread out the paper on her desk, shut her eyes hard, drew a long breath before she looked. There was not much on the page, but what there was, was in Mrs. Dane's fine writing. The date was that of a week before she died. The words burned into Brooke's mind as if written with a red-hot poker:

"I don't know how to word a formal will, but I hereby give and bequeath all my property real and personal—which I left in a previous will to Brooke Reyburn—except the amount as stated in said will to be given to my faithful servants, Henri and Clotilde Jacques, to my nephew Mark Trent, to have and to hold during his life and to dispose of as he wishes. I know now that my ideas of right and wrong should not deprive him of his rightful inheritance. He was a wonderful son. He has been a devoted nephew. I make him sole executor without bonds of my estate. I ask him to provide an income sufficient for frills and fun for my dear young friend, Brooke Reyburn."

Brooke studied the signature. Mary Amanda Dane's without a doubt, unless it was a clever forgery, Anne Gregory's name sprawling under it, and Henri's and Clotilde's tight, foreign writing.

Suppose she destroyed this paper which would deprive her of a fortune? A lighted match under it and it would go up in smoke. Who would know? Who would believe Henri against her? Wasn't he already under suspicion in the filling station hold-up? Suppose he did try blackmail? He wouldn't get far with it.

What terrible thing was she thinking? The eyes of the white faced girl who stared back at her from the mirror were big with horror.

Was she two persons? Had her other self turned craven? Had that thought changed her face? For an instant she had been a criminal at heart. She, Brooke Reyburn, who considered her personal standards of honor and decency of the highest. After this she would understand temptation as she never had understood it before.

A car! Lucette and Sam. She must hurry and dress. Sometime during the evening she would give the paper to Mark Trent. That would be her answer to Henri. Where could she put it meanwhile? She would tuck it inside her frock.

She was fastening the corsage of green orchids Mark Trent had sent her to the front of her gleaming silver frock when she met her brown eyes in the mirror. She dropped the flowers as if they had burned her fingers. She couldn't wear his gift until she was sure that he believed that she had not known until this evening of his aunt's change of mind. Why hadn't he come directly to her when he had heard Mrs. Gregory's story? Because he believed she knew where the will was, that she was dishonest, that was why. Perhaps he was right. What would he think of her if he suspected that for a split second she had thought of burning it?

She would wear Jerry's gardenias; she had chosen Mark the Magnificent's orchids first, simply because he was her host, she assured herself.

She added more color to her white cheeks, to her lips, dusted her face with powder, anything to switch her mind from that nightmare instant of terrifying suggestion.

She waited until she heard her brother's and her sister's doors close before she opened hers. Sam popped his head out and called:

"White tie tonight, Brooke?"

"Of course, Sam. Our promising young playwright must be swanky. I've had your top hat ironed and there's a gardenia in a box on your dresser."

She heard his groan of resignation as she started down the stairs. She stopped on the threshold of the living-room she loved. Now it would be torn up by the roots, all her father's treasures would go back to storage. And her gorgeous flower—windows would be but a dream. Would she be obliged to return the money she had spent? That would mean dragging a ball and chain of debt the rest of her life. Cheerful prospect. Could Mary Amanda Dane's "little friend, Brooke Reyburn," see herself accepting from Mark the Magnificent an income sufficient for "frills and fun"? Never. She would have to hunt for a job. But she wouldn't have to hunt—she wouldn't! The Palm beach offer! Had the position been filled? She would send a night letter. Better do it now before Sam and Lucette came down.

As she waited for the telephone call to go through, she told herself that she had learned one inestimable lesson: she had learned that for every person the gateway to success was in himself; that achievement was a matter of keeping on keeping on, of giving one's best and trying, everlastingly trying to make that best better. She was returning to business equipped with that knowledge.

She gave her message and turned to the fire. She didn't really mind going back to work, she had loved it, but she had planned to do so much for her mother, for Lucette, for Sam.

Sam! Nothing must happen to distract his mind from the production of the play. If she were to produce that will now, the neighborhood, to say nothing of the cast, would palpitate with excitement, the Reyburns would have to leave Lookout House at once. She knew nothing of law except that it was as relentless as a juggernaut. What the court decreed had to be done. A producer from New York was coming to see Sam's comedy. The Boston manager wouldn't bring him down unless he thought Sam had talent. The performance was only 48 hours away. Could she keep Henri quiet until then? If she couldn't she was the world's worst actress, and Sam had said that she was good. After the play Mark Trent was to keep open house for cast and audience. She would stay until the last guest had departed, then she would give this will, burning against her skin, to him and fade gracefully from the picture. Better lock it up in her desk until then. It wouldn't be safe to carry it around with her.

Back in her boudoir she locked the paper in an inside drawer of her desk and slipped the key into her bag of silver sequins.

Returning to the living-room, she paused before the portrait above the mantel. "This all means that you and I will be on the move again," she said in a low voice. "On the move, but with banners, Duchess! With banners!" She threw a kiss to the woman in green satin and emeralds who looked back at her gravely.

Sam appeared in the doorway, and Brooke quickly asked: "Have you heard any more particulars about—about what you call the crime wave?"

She perched on the arm of a big chair and looked up at Sam standing with one elbow on the mantel.

"Nope, nothing except the usual lot of wild yarns which roll up like snowballs at a time like this. Have you ever thought that one of her ex-lovers might have bumped off the fair Lola?"

"Sam! Where did you hear that?"

"Didn't hear it. That ex-lover motif is a plot, a little thing of my own. It's my conception of what should have occurred to put claws, tearing, digging, ravening claws into the Filling Station Mystery. May use the idea sometime; that's why I asked you to clip all the accounts of the police activities and confessions, if there were any. Have you done it?"

"I have, from every paper I could get hold of. When you want them they are in a manila envelope in the lower right-hand drawer of my desk. I haven't said anything to you about it but I was afraid that after what had happened, Mark Trent might feel that he could not go on with the play."

"Afraid! That's putting it mildly. I nearly had heart failure till he assured me that he would keep his part. He'll make 'Islands Arise,' He does more than play the lead, he puts glamour into the comedy and warmth and strength and vitality. I told him he was a fighting lover. He looked queer for a minute; perhaps he was thinking that he didn't put up much of a battle for that wife of his who walked off with the French count. Why should he change his plans for a woman like that? The shock of the tragedy has practically worn off. Spirits are picking up and by day after tomorrow everyone will be keen to make whoopee, to get the thing out of their minds. Two days! Boy, but I get cold feet when I think of all that night means to me."

He frowned at his younger sister who, in a diaphanous white evening frock sprinkled with gold leaves, appeared in the doorway.

"Lucette, when Jerry Field quotes 'Islands Arise,' look as if he were saying something serious, not as if he were inviting—"

"I've followed exactly the business in my sides, Master Reyburn."

"Don't apologize."

"I'm not apologizing. I'm explaining."

"Remember, kiddo, that tomorrow night will be the last rehearsal."

"For which blessing, praise be to Allah! I'll tell you right now, Sam Reyburn, you'll never get me in another play of yours."

"Boy, I won't want you! 'Islands Arise' will be a smash hit! I'll have the best actors in New York camping on my trail for a chance in it! I'll—"

He looked at his sisters watching him with fascinated eyes. Dark color surged to his hair. "I suppose you two girls think I'm a darn fool."

Lucette made a little dash toward him and patted his arm.

Lesson for September 26

GOD IN THE MAKING OF A NATION

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 8:11-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day.—Deuteronomy 8:11.
PRIMARY TOPIC—To Help Us Remember.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Giver of Gifts.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God in the Making of a Nation.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God in the Making of a Nation.

God in the making of the nation of Israel—this has been our general subject for a number of months. In this concluding lesson we meet up with a solemn warning that even though God's mighty works have been revealed on behalf of a people, it is possible for them to become proud and self-confident, forgetting him whose they are and whom they should serve, and perishing in their rebellion and sin.

I. "Beware That Thou Forget Not the Lord" (v. 11).

How could this people who had come up out of slavery and been led "through that great and terrible wilderness" (v. 15), who had been fed by God's hand, who had received "water out of the rock of flint," who had become a great nation by his grace and blessing, now forget God? It would seem unbelievable, did we not know ourselves. We need this warning as badly as Israel. Shout a stirring "Beware" from coast to coast as this lesson is taught, for America is forgetting God. Space does not permit a review of the appalling facts here, but they are enough to make one's heart sick with sorrow and fear for the future of our nation.

II. "Lest . . . Thou Say . . . My Power" (vv. 12-17).

How trenchant and altogether fitting are the words of Scripture. Nothing could describe our times more succinctly and accurately than v. 17. Men are glorying in their ability to do things. Science has made mighty strides forward. Industry has brought forth so many striking developments that a single company is able to present as a reflection of its own work a veritable "House of Magic."

We honor those who by skillful hand and brilliant brain produce excellent and thrilling results. But our question is, "How many are there who say, 'God has done this thing. He gave the strength and the skill. His is the honor?'" Some there are who thus recognize him, but they are few indeed. Their name is legion who say in their heart, "My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth" (v. 17).

God, forgive us, cleanse us, and give us grace to walk humbly before Thee!

III. "Remember the Lord . . . He . . . Giveth Thee Power." (v. 18).

Joseph Parker points out that a deep conviction of the fact stated in v. 18 "would turn human history into a sacrament." He says, "What a blow this text strikes at one of the most popular and mischievous fallacies in common life—namely, that man is the maker of his own money!" He makes a stirring plea (see People's Bible, Vol. IV, p. 188) for bringing God, who has been "crushed like a rose leaf in the Bible," out into the market place, into the office and the warehouse, for if man will make "his warehouse into a church" he will never turn the church into a warehouse.

Would that we could once and for all do away with all "Sunday religion," and bring the gospel of grace and the laws of God into the office, the factory, the school, and the home, for every day and every incident and transaction of life.

IV. "If Thou . . . Forget . . . Ye Shall . . . Perish" (vv. 19, 20).

Reading this passage in the light of our knowledge of what did happen to Israel, we agree that the warning was needed, even though it was not heeded. Shall we then dismiss the matter with perhaps an expression of regret that they so disobeyed God and missed his blessing? If we do we miss the most important point in our lesson, for the fact is that our nation is just as dependent on God, and in just as much danger of forgetting him and perishing.

God punished even his chosen people in the day that they forgot him. Let not America think that she will escape if she goes on her way, forgetting God. We plead again, as we did last Sunday, for a deep going revival among God's people, and a renewed zeal for the salvation of lost men and women.

Every Day

Happy and strong and brave shall we be—able to endure all things, and to do all things—if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment of our life is in His hands.

Monuments of the Great

Monuments! what are they? the very pyramids have forgotten their builders, or to whom they were dedicated. Deeds, not stones, are the true monuments of the great.—Motley.

Vying for Your Favor

ONE, two, three smart frocks on the line ready to go—shopping, kitchenwards, to the office downtown. And as every woman knows, a well stocked wardrobe needs all three.

From Now On.

Says the jaunty model to the left, "I can tell I'm gonna feel well dressed in this little peplum frock: ready for sports, a matinee or dinner in town, and the confident high spirits my new lines give make me sure that I will be wanted at all three."

"I made my version of sheer wool with a subdued herringbone weave. It will be my number one attire for a long spell ahead."

One Who Knows.

Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful, in the center, expresses herself: "Even when I do housework I like to look and feel fit."

"When I dash out to the store or go across lots to the neighbor's to borrow an egg, I don't bother to change my dress because I have the feeling I'm doing all right as I am. I wouldn't think of a new season coming on without running up a generous supply of crisp, fresh dresses for myself. They seem to set one right, you know, and give you the spirit to pitch into any day's work like a champion."

The Last Word.

Miss Third Party goes in for that new kind of glamour in the simple model at the right. Says she: "I feel that Fall is really the season to step out and hob-nob with Fashion and the Joneses. This frock, which is my weakness in plum-colored wool, was as easy to make as it is to wear."

"Later on I'm going to have a velvet version with short sleeves—these slim lines and elegant shoulders were just made for this queen of all fabrics—and evidently I go for things royal."

The Patterns.

Pattern 1348 is designed in sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, plus 1½ yards for contrast.

Pattern 1304 is designed for sizes 34 to 46. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 35-inch material, plus ½ yard contrasting.

Pattern 1374 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material. With short sleeves, size 16 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, plus ½ yard for collar in contrast. To trim the collar requires 4½ yards of braid.

Uncle Phil Says:

Unwanted Effect

Sometimes a soft answer can be so utterly soft as to loose one's wrath instead of turning it away. Yea, tolerance can be mere laziness.

People do not loosen up on the purse-strings until you reach their heart-strings.

How many have discretion enough not to disagree with others when it doesn't matter?

Many may feel that their days are full of chores and bores. For You Make an Enemy

In an argument with a fellow-being when you win, you lose.

"Youth is a blunder," said Disraeli. But there's where men get their wisdom.

Two hours to pursue one's absorbing hobby makes any man's day happy.

Peace of mind and approximate happiness might perhaps be any man's who will live a well-nigh hermit life; but the poor chap hasn't the fortitude to do it.

So soon as it is learned that you gossip, everybody is afraid of you.

Unbearable Suffering

I HAVE suffered much, but I am now fully convinced that no man has any right to grumble if he can be ill without experiencing the torture of feeling that if his illness continues for any length of time there will be poverty and inadequate education for the ones that he loves.

Be understanding with those who in their illness are haunted by fears for the future; seek to understand what it is that lies behind their complaining, and ask God to prevent you from being clumsy when you try to give them a message of hope.

Nazareth, in Galilee
The town of Nazareth, in Galilee, had a military history for many years in medieval days. Mohammedans captured it early in the first years of their faith, but never vanquished the faith of its inhabitants. The Crusaders in 1100 retook it and made it the see city of the diocese of Scythopolis. Afterwards it was captured by the Mohammedans, and again recaptured, until in 1263, on again taking possession of it, the followers of the Prophet massacred all the inhabitants, who were in any way connected with Christianity.

Our Bill of Rights
By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Recently America observed with nation-wide ceremonies the 150th anniversary of the signing of our Constitution on September 17, 1787.

During the same month occurs a similarly significant, though less widely observed anniversary, commemorating the adoption by Congress, on September 25, 1789, of our American Bill of Rights.

Ratified by the States, and proclaimed in force by December of 1791, this group of ten amendments constitutes one of the greatest bulwarks of personal liberty in all history.

Why? Because it is the Bill of Rights that assures to all Americans their treasured freedom of religion, of speech and of the press.

It is the Bill of Rights which guarantees them the right to trial by jury, the right to own property, and protection against such forms of oppression as imprisonment without legal process, cruel and unusual punishment, or unreasonable search and seizure.

It is the Bill of Rights which retains to the people all other rights not delegated to government.

Check these rights and privileges against the few permitted those peoples now oppressed by the new tyrannies over-seas.

There, news dispatches report a growing record of deprivation of the right to worship, to speak, to assemble, to labor or to live as the conscience and the spirit of the individual citizen impels him.

There, unjust imprisonment, trials that are mere mockery, blood purges and the like, continue to make a travesty of freedom.

Such things don't happen in the United States. And they will not happen here so long as the Constitution and the Bill of Rights prevail, with an independent judiciary to sustain them.

That is what makes the anniversaries of our Constitution and our Bill of Rights such significant celebrations, not only to Americans but to all who believe in the liberty of man.

FARMERS VISIT
THOMSON HYBRID
CORN FIELDS

A number of local farmers visited the Thomson Hybrid Seed Corn fields in Frankfort township Saturday afternoon, because of their interest in the background of the seed they used and the wish to see how hybrid seed was developed and grown. They not only traversed the fields, but went into the different phases of soil and work that have a bearing on the quality of the seed that they expect to plant the coming year.

Many were surprised to note that these fields, although having suffered a heavy frost on the day before, were seemingly little affected. They were told that this hybrid can take one degree lower temperature than other corn plants before experiencing cell rupture, which is the reason of killing by frost. Many plants die by cold when as low as 42 degrees F. is reached, but here we have a plant that can stand one degree below freezing.

This is particularly valuable in the seedling period in spring when light frosts can be withstood. Cold resistance is a feature that can be correlated to an unusual ability to get phosphorus from the soil, making extensiveness of root structure that gets both food and water from lower soil zones than obtained by ordinary corn plants.

The visitors appreciated that one has to see a seed field of this sort to appreciate the uniformity of the well filled ears and their position on the stalk, and to get a picture of the different features and things that go into hybrid seed to make it more valuable and better suited to the farm that uses it.

One aim that was pointed out to them was to get the maximum amount of plant food into each kernel in order that the seedling that springs from that kernel may have the quickest and best start off in its new cycle of life, and be able in our near the lake cold climate of the spring season to have the plant food that enables the seedling to not only withstand the climate but to grow when other seedlings would be helpless and standing still. This filling of the kernel to maximum capacity has another happy side to it from the farmer's standpoint. It makes a much higher percentage of edgdrop kernels on the cob and of greater uniformity. But to do this takes a lot of planning, care, management and work and is far from happenstance. To do this well makes the production of seed corn costly but it adds greatly to the value of the seed for the farmer grower.

One of the sights distinctive of this hybrid field is the erect position of each corn stalk, one after another, as if the entire row had been set with a plumb. Not only a pleasure to view but highly prized when husking. No one who grows corn should miss this opportunity of viewing the hybrid seed in the field and of learning to recognize the conditions and differences that make up the range of hybrid seed value. It explains why some farmers after using hybrid seed last spring said that they would rather have their own open pollinated while neighbors just over the fence are most enthusiastic of hybrid possibilities. It illustrates that all hybrid seed is not alike and there is a greater range in hybrid seed than in open pollinated. The differences are no longer discernible when the seed is in the bag but can be seen and recognized in the hybrid seed field, particularly when the various features are pointed out.

Get this hybrid seed corn education and take the young folks with you, one day they will have the responsibility of seed corn selection, so make it a family affair. Every visitor is invited to pick a seed ear of his ideal to take home. Your ideal is in the fields.

"Matter" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 19.

The Golden Text was, "Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the Lord your God" (Leviticus 19:4).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord JEHOVAH is everlasting strength. O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name" (Isaiah 26:4, 13).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Divine Science deals its chief blow at the supposed material foundations of life and intelligence. It dooms idolatry. A belief in other gods, other creators, and other creations must go down before Christian Science" (p. 535).

LIFE

Life is but a pilgrimage toward the vast unseen, And while we travel onward, it's as though we're in a dream, We move, we hesitate, we stop along the weary way, And wonder if we ever will, come to the promised day. We think of all the crushing things that's happened in times past, And thus we bind our hands and feet as though in an iron cast. We blast our hopes and wreck our lives and bind ourselves with fears, Make aching hearts and troubled minds, and fill our eyes with tears, While the God of Love that rules our world, is willing to share The trials and troubles of us all, why not place them there? And too, if we could but learn, to live our lives from day to day And listen to what the wee small voice within might have to say, We'd rise to conquer our own self and justly claim our rights, And only, then, will we again be free to rise to higher heights. P. E. Haney, March 23, 1936.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Andres and Mr. and Mrs. C. Andres spent Saturday in Aurora with the Henry Andres family.

Last Thursday the Tinley Park fishermen, consisting of Henry Vogt, Wm. Rick, R. Gonias, G. Dini and Walter Mancke, returned from Manitowish, Wis. While there they visited Little Bohemia, a summer resort in which the late John Dillinger and his gang of out laws, shot it out with the federal men. The owners of the resort have capitalized on the notoriety obtained by this shooting affair. The room in which the Dillinger gang was trapped shows all the evidence of the heavy battle. The window lights are shot out and bullet holes dot the walls. The room has been left just as it was after the shooting affair. The band of outlaws escaped over a lake on the other side of the building. Over 40,000 persons visited this resort last year. The fishermen report a grand and glorious time and the stay was all too short. 24 hours were consumed making the round trip. This left only three days in which to fish.

The work of improving 175th St. with crushed stone has just about been completed and the asphalt top dressing will be applied next. This street improvement has been badly needed and is a big benefit to the residents of the south side of the village

Last Monday evening, friends gave a miscellaneous shower in honor of Bernice Vogt-Gee, in the home of Miss Lillian Mencke. Bernice was greatly surprised and her girl friends now feel satisfied, as Bernice surprised them by getting married on June 3rd of this year. The home of Lillian's was beautifully decorated for the occasion and Bernice received many beautiful gifts.

Congressman Laurence Arnold announced the appointment of Prentiss, Puffer, Democrat, as acting postmaster of Centralia to succeed Walter C. Vass, who died.

Ralph O'Neal, forty-two years old, city treasurer of Quincy, died of injuries suffered in an automobile accident. He was a Legionnaire and a leading Democrat.

Lowell L. Seago, forty-three years old, a grain dealer and manager of the Morris elevator in Ottawa, was found dead in his automobile. He apparently suffered a heart attack.

Wallace Treichler, for forty years city engineer of Rock Island, and for many years also county superintendent of highways, died in the Lutheran hospital in Moline.

Workmen at Starved Rock state park have built enclosures for three buffaloes and two elk recently acquired for the park zoo from the state game farm at Salem.

Danny Allison, Jr., a farmer, was found dead in his automobile parked on a Danville street. A bullet wound was in his head. A revolver was in his hands.

The state finance department announced that downstate investigators in August had established delinquent and deficient retailers' occupation tax liability of $81,183.

A complete check on drunken drivers whose driving privileges in the state have been suspended is being kept by the state highway police department at district offices and in Springfield.

Aurora's centennial celebration was officially opened by religious services in the churches. The celebration included a week of entertainments and civic events. A Labor day parade was held, followed by a program at Phillips park. In another parade the historical development of the city was depicted. A program devoted to youth, including a parade, was another feature.

Federal Judge Charles G. Briggie set October 4 as the auction date of the Jacksonville & Havana railroad which was established in July, 1926, following the breakup of the 84-year-old Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis railroad. The sale is to be held at Virginia. Elmer Nafziger, receiver, said the line probably would be sold as junk, as no one other road has shown interest in the property.

E. A. Mitchell, eighty-three, Chillicothe, died after a lingering illness. As a member of the first Illinois state highway commission Mitchell gained the title of "Father" of the highway system. He was named by Governor Richard Yates. During the World war he served as chairman of the Peoria county board of exemption. He also served several terms as mayor of Chillicothe.

Plans were completed for the Illinois state Grotto convention to be held in Rock Island September 17 and 18. A feature of the two-day convention will be a parade Saturday, September 18. Prizes will be awarded to the best band, drill team and drum corps entered in the parade. An open invitation has been extended to all Grotto and other fraternal organizations to enter units.

Members of the state mine examining board and the state department of mines and minerals approved a new mine being sunk near Herrin by the Consolidated Coal company. The new mine, known as the "Buckhorn," makes possible the mining of the "second" vein of coal and will use the conveyor system throughout. Coal will be broken down by compressed air and there will be no powder blasting.

Trailer camps, established in various parts of Winnebago county, are creating a new problem for the county schools. Persons stopping at trailer camps are sending their children to rural schools. Thirty children coming from four trailer camps in the Harris school district, raised that district's school enrollment one-third. A similar situation exists in four or five other districts.

Commissioner Peter T. Swanish, chief of Illinois' new division of unemployment compensation, announced that "status reports" will be sent to over 190,000 employers in Illinois, in an effort to determine the liability of specific employers under the Illinois unemployment act passed last July. Employers are required to pay by January 1, 1938, an amount equal to 1.8 per cent of their total pay roll disbursements for the present year. Payments by employers will constitute the fund from which 2,000,000 working men and women in Illinois will benefit under the act.

J. B. Miller, sixty-four years old, former state representative for Kankakee county and state's attorney, died in Kankakee after a long illness. Attorney Miller once headed the Illinois States' Attorney's association and was a member of the Hamilton Club of Chicago.

Harry Keller was pouring gasoline from a can in a milk house near Clifton when his father-in-law, Edward Oderwald, a farmer, seventy-four years old, walked in with a lighted lantern. The fumes exploded and Oderwald was burned critically.

JIMMY SKUNK MEETS THE STRANGER

WHEN at last Unc' Billy Possum got safely back to his hollow tree he knew, of course, that Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow and Peter Rabbit were not crazy, as he had so often said they were. Anyway, if they were, why he must be himself, for hadn't he seen the very stranger Sammy and Blacky had told about? If Unc' Billy couldn't believe what they said he felt sure he could believe his own eyes. He just knew his own eyes couldn't fool him like that.

It made Unc' Billy shiver every time he thought of that stranger he had seen deep in the Green Forest by the pond of Paddy the Beaver. He was so big! And he had such great cruel-looking claws!

"A husband's starvation wage," says poverish Pearl, "seldom gives a wife anything new to her back but weight."

"Ah—Ah hope he can't climb trees!" said Unc' Billy.

Now Unc' Billy had spoken aloud, for he didn't know that anyone was near. So he jumped almost out of his skin when a voice said:

"Who is it you hope can't climb trees, Unc' Billy?"

Unc' Billy looked down to find his old friend Jimmy Skunk looking up at him. He hesitated a few minutes. He knew that Jimmy thought that Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow were crazy or else were telling untrue stories, and he didn't like to tell Jimmy what he had seen himself. You see, he didn't want to be laughed at or thought crazy. But he felt that he just had to tell someone, and so finally he told Jimmy Skunk all about it. Jimmy looked at Unc' Billy very sharply, but Unc' Billy was so very much in earnest that Jimmy had to believe that Unc' Billy really thought he had seen this terrible stranger. Jimmy never had heard of such a stranger in the Green Forest. He couldn't quite believe there was one even after Unc' Billy had said so. But he didn't like to say so. You see, Unc' Billy was an old friend and he didn't want to hurt his feelings.

"I think I'll go up to the pond of Paddy the Beaver and see if I can see anything of this stranger," said Jimmy.

"Ah wouldn't if Ah was yo', Br'er Skunk! 'Deed Ah wouldn't! Yo' don' know what he may do to yo' with those great claws. Mah goodness, Ah cert'nly does hope he can't climb trees!" Unc' Billy looked so anxious that Jimmy had to turn his head so as to hide a smile.

"I'll go ask him if he climbs trees and then I'll come and let you know, Unc' Billy," said he.

Now, Unc' Billy knew that Jimmy Skunk is afraid of nothing and nobody unless it is Farmer Brown's boy when he has his terrible gun, but he also knew that Jimmy had never seen and had no idea of this great stranger who had given him such a fright, and he couldn't believe that Jimmy would dare ask him any questions. He watched Jimmy march off into the Green Forest and he grinned just a little.

"Br'er Skunk never hurries, but Ah reckons Ah'll see him hurry right smart if he meets up with that stranger," muttered Unc' Billy.

Jimmy Skunk went on until he came to the pond of Paddy the Beaver, which you know is deep in the Green Forest. Jimmy was tired and he sat down to rest. It was very still there. Paddy the Beaver was nowhere to be seen. Neither was the stranger. Jimmy grew sleepy. He made up his mind that he would take a nap before he looked any further, and he started to find a nice soft spot to curl up on when he heard a heavy step behind him. Jimmy whirled about and there just coming out of the bushes was the stranger of whom Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow and Unc' Billy Possum had told, and he was just as big and just as black and had just such great cruel claws as they had said.

"I don't know who you are, but I'm very glad to meet you," said Jimmy Skunk politely.

First Aid to the Ailing House

—By— Roger B. Whitman

DODGING TROUBLE

I HAVE had more questions on how to overcome wetness in cellars than on any other one subject. Questions have come from every part of the country. There is no commoner house trouble.

In a flood, when water runs into a cellar through the windows, it is a catastrophe that cannot be avoided. But ordinary wetness, due only to water in the ground outside the walls or under the floor, can be kept out by adapting the construction to the conditions, and with high quality materials and good workmanship. Almost always, cellar wetness can be blamed on carelessness; on poor construction; on a failure to study ground conditions and to plan the cellar according to the needs.

Common faults are poor materials in the walls and poor workmanship: porous mortar joints; too little mortar in the joints; low quality concrete in poured concrete walls and carelessness in the pouring; thin concrete floors, and no provisions for drainage. All of these causes are avoidable. I feel very strongly that a home builder should foresee them and insist on materials and workmanship that will make his cellar waterproof.

One of the commonest mistakes is in the filling of the part of the excavation that is outside the walls. This cavity is usually filled with the debris of building; chunks of concrete and plaster, old bricks, stones, and even cut-off ends of timbers, the whole thing being covered and hidden by a layer of top soil. In a rain, water running down the side of the house soaks through the top layer and collects in the open spaces beneath. It stands in a pool against the outside of the foundation walls, and finds its way under the floor. The pressure that is created drives water through weak and porous places in walls and floor. Pressure may be sufficient to crack the floor.

To remedy this, fill the cavity outside the walls with solidly packed earth. There will then be no spaces in which water can collect; pressure will not be created, and this cause for cellar wetness will be completely avoided. In addition, the outside of the walls should be coated with tar or asphalt.

The filling of the excavation is not the only cause for cellar wetness, but it is the commonest. Avoiding it will add little or nothing to the cost of construction. But whatever the extra expense might be, it would not compare with the cost of making the cellar dry after the house is finished.

THE INDIAN BOY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

UPON the plain the Indian boy
Is playing with the white man's toy

And talking in the white man's tongue,
An Indian boy whose fathers sprung
From a long line of braves of yore
Who now are legends, nothing more.

But now and then he lays aside
The white man's toy and looks with wide,
Wide eyes across the ancient plain,
Now ripening with the white man's grain.

Forgets awhile the white man's school,
The white man's bounty, and his rule.

A frightened bird stirs in her nest,
And something stirs within his breast
Beneath the white man's clothes he wears.

From plain to ridge to hill he stares,
Yes, seeking in the sky above
For something he is cheated of.

Only a legend, not a land,
A boy finds hard to understand,
Only a legend he recalls
That echoes like far waterfalls,
The people of his form and face
Only a legend, not a race.

THE RIGHT WORD

By W. Curtis Nicholson

© The Associated Newspapers

IS IT ALWAYS TRUE?

THE following letter has been received from Charles Riegels:

"I would like to ask 'The Right Word' a question. At different times, I have noticed that the column has told its readers that the possessive case should always precede a verbal noun. I agree with this, but is it always true that a construction that appears like a verbal noun construction is really a verbal noun construction? I am referring to something like this:

"I have read about his refusing the appointment."

"In the light of my study of 'The Right Word,' I should say that the word 'refusing' is a verbal noun, and that it is the object of the preposition 'about.' It is for this reason that we use the possessive 'his' before it. But please examine the following sentence:

"I was watching him struggling up the incline. He looked so feeble I wanted to go to his assistance."

"In this sentence, is not 'him' the object of 'watching,' and is not 'struggling' only an adjective modifying 'him'?"

Mr. Riegels has analyzed this problem very well. There is no doubt that "refusing" is the object of "have read" in the first sentence; and, from the underlying thought of the second illustration, it is apparent that "I was watching him" and noting his appearance (while he was struggling up the incline).

Mr. Riegels should have begun his letter with "I should like to ask."

Questions

Cleaning Brass.—Never use vinegar to clean brass. Though it cleans at first, it soon causes tarnish. The proper materials for cleaning brass are oil and rottenstone.

Egg as Cleanser.—The yolk of egg may be used for removing mud, chocolate or coffee stains from any kind of material except velvet. Rub into the stain, wash off with warm soapy water, and rinse thoroughly.

Preparing Parsley.—Parsley washed with hot water keeps its flavor better and is easier to chop.

Treating Dry Glue.—Vinegar added to dry glue will make the glue fit for use again.

When Preserving.—Don't pack jars too tightly when preserving fruits and vegetables. Leave a space of at least half an inch at the top for liquid.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It always comes about that when a nation or an individual acts without thinking a problem through all of its angles, there is a fine mess at the end.

At the present time we find not only bitter strife between the old established American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization headed by John L. Lewis; a national labor relations board that cannot be described by any stretch of the imagination as being unbiased, and political leaders from President Roosevelt down the line are quite unable to determine what their position should be between the warring factions of labor. Meanwhile, we find employers wholly unable to deal with either faction successfully because of the interference of the labor relations board and the instability of responsible officials.

The case in point and the incident that brings the situation immediately before the American people involves a comparatively small number of workers but it exposes all of the fallacies that have been allowed to become part of the law of the land through the labor relations act which was forced through congress by Senator Wagner, New York New Dealer, with Presidential support. Let us review the picture:

Late in August, the United States district court in Pennsylvania issued a decree that the National Electric Products corporation of Ambridge, Pa., must sign a wage contract with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, an organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The court ordered the action as a result of difficulties between the American Federation of Labor and the United Electrical Workers which is connected with the Committee for Industrial Organization. The manufacturing corporation had no alternative but to comply with the court order. If it did not do so, its officials faced jail sentences for contempt.

Within a week thereafter, along comes the national labor relations board with a ruling that the manufacturing corporation must sign a wage contract with the Committee for Industrial Organization union or be subjected to the penalties and punishment provided in the Wagner labor relations act. The board took this position with full knowledge of the federal court decree. It went so far, even, as to say that "the decree (of the court) is no bar to the instant proceeding under the national labor relations act or to the making of an order by the board under the terms of that act, that the respondent shall cease and desist from discriminating against the employees because they decline to join the brotherhood." In other words, the board took the position that the Wagner labor relations act was the supreme law of the land and the board, therefore, was the sole arbiter regardless of the court action.

I do not know anything about the merits of the workers' claim that the manufacturing company had mistreated workers, had fired men for union activities or had engaged in attempts to break up union organization. Those claims may be fully justified; indeed, the chances are that there was anti-union activity on the part of the corporation and that it should receive a legal kick in the pants for these things. But whatever that situation is, the fact remains that the national labor relations board consistently has horned into every controversy and, whether it means to be that way or not, its actions have been favorable to the Lewis Committee for Industrial Organization.

Further, among the most extreme of the New Dealers themselves, one frequently hears the observation that the labor relations board has given no consideration at all to the rights of the employer. Of course, the board claims it is acting under strict construction of the law. Then it holds that congress intended it to take the place of the courts in deciding as between labor groups. It is to be remembered, however, that all members of the board are appointees of President Roosevelt and the presumption naturally follows that Mr. Roosevelt must approve of the board's policies. It is too much to suppose that the board would act against the wishes of the man who named its individual members.

All of these facts make it appear that instead of having a labor policy, we have on the statute books a law that has led us straight into the mess that I described at the beginning of this discussion. I am wondering when it can be or will be corrected. Superficially, the facts of the labor relations board history thus far make it appear that the members of that board are aligned with John L. Lewis and the tactics he has employed. If they are, and if President Roosevelt wants to protect trade unionism in this country, it seems to me he ought to get rid of the members of that board and name commissioners who can be fair between the two labor groups whether they want to consider the rights of those who pay the wages or not.

On top of the situation I have described comes a fresh outburst from John L. Lewis in the shape of a threat against those officially responsible for administration of federal affairs. In fact, few persons could have heard the Lewis Labor day radio speech without realizing that the shaggy haired C. I. O. leader was telling Mr. Roosevelt to refrain from placing any obstacle in the C. I. O. pathway. Some commentators went so far as to say that Mr. Lewis had slapped the President's face in that speech.

It will be recalled how some time ago the President told the newspaper correspondent in a press conference that he was taking no sides between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. The expression he used was a line from Shakespeare: "A plague on both your houses." I quote Mr. Lewis' reply to that remark:

"It ill behooves one who has supped at labor's table and who has been sheltered in labor's house to curse with equal fervor and fine impartiality both labor and its adversaries when they become locked in deadly embrace."

Thus it becomes plain, I believe, that Mr. Lewis is determined to go forward with his labor problems into the depths of politics. From his $25,000 home in Alexandria, Va., Labor Leader Lewis directs the hundreds of subordinates, the reds and pinks, the whites and blacks, from which he apparently expects to develop a political organization strong enough to control this nation.

President Roosevelt is on another "inspection trip" of the nation. Before he left, he told the press that he wanted to see for himself what the New Deal had accomplished, explaining that there would be a few speeches, but that there would be more "intake than outgo" on the trip.

Washington political observers almost unanimously agreed, however, that the inspection trip had a much deeper purpose. They noted that the President was visiting various states from which there were members of the United States senate who had opposed the President's plan to increase the Supreme court by six appointees of his own choosing. Among these senators were Wheeler of Montana, Burke of Nebraska, Clark of Missouri, and O'Mahoney of Wyoming. They noted further that some representatives who had been outspoken in opposition to the court bill were privileged to have the President visit their home districts.

These political students arrived at the conclusion I have mentioned despite the declaration of Postmaster General Farley who, as chairman of the Democratic National committee, said that there would be no reprisals against senators and representatives who had opposed the court bill. Mr. Farley's promise of no reprisals came, however, after the now famous radio speech by Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania. Mr. Guffey is chairman of the Democratic senatorial committee which has the job of promoting election of Democratic candidates for the senate. When he said, therefore, that opponents of the court bill ought to be defeated and listed the names of a number of senators who should not be re-elected, it does seem that there may be a connection between the Guffey speech and Mr. Roosevelt's inspection trip. Some commentators have been uncouth enough to assert that the inspection trip by the President was for the purpose of determining whether it would be possible for the New Deal to obtain destruction of those Democrats who had disagreed with the White House.

Aside from the court bill, it seems entirely reasonable to suppose that Mr. Roosevelt desires to gain knowledge of the country's general temper. He has refrained from announcing whether he will call a special session of congress this fall to take up agricultural legislation, saying only that he will decide later. Secretary Wallace is very anxious that this shall happen. Officials of his department have been traveling by plane, train and motor through the country during the last two months in an effort to build up sentiment for the secretary's kind of farm legislation. They have been making these trips at taxpayers' expense, too.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

FAMOUS SONG WRITER WAS NEWSBOY

PEOPLE who are able to help others express happiness and those who amuse us always have a chance for success far out of proportion to circumstances of birth or environment. So, rightly, the world sees to it that persons who can drive away care have no financial worries.

Irving Berlin was born in Russia in 1888, the youngest of eight children. His father, a cantor or psalm-singer in the village synagogue, brought the family to New York's East Side tenement district when Irving was four years old. The boy loved to sing, but his first jobs were as a newsboy, and a telegraph delivery boy. His was the depressing life of the slums child, street-fighting, swimming in the dirty East river, dodging traffic in the streets at play. At fourteen, he left home to sing in saloons for pennies the patrons tossed to him. He was in the chorus of a musical show, was a waiter in a Chinese restaurant, and a singing waiter in a couple of night clubs.

Up to this time, the happiness Irving Berlin brought to others was limited to the few people who could see and hear him. His voice was not unusual enough to bring him to the top rank of entertainers. Then, he started writing songs. The first one brought him only 37 cents, the next, $25; but thereafter he advanced rapidly. He worked often until two or three o'clock in the morning, and by the time he was thirty-six, 300 songs had been published under his name, including such world-known hits as "Down on the Farm," "Everybody's Doin' It," "My Wife Has Gone to the Country," and "Alexander's Rag-time Band."

PRESIDENT WAS LAUNDRYMAN

WORK is a habit, and to those who acquire it it becomes fun, relaxation coming through the kind of work done. In analyzing the lives of successful men and women, we usually find that they got the work habit early in life and never lost it.

Herbert Hoover was a worker. He was born in 1874, in West Branch, Iowa, the son of a blacksmith. His father died when he was six years old, his mother when he was nine; and he went to live with an uncle who operated a Quaker academy in Oregon. Herbert earned his board by doing odd chores, feeding and currying the horses, milking cows, and tending the furnace. All of this was in addition to his regular school work and, as if this were not enough work for a young boy, he studied English literature and history outside of school hours. Later in Salem, Oregon, Herbert worked as an office boy for his uncle, and went to night school until he had enough credits to enter Leland Stanford university. He worked his way through by acting as clerk for the registrar, and handling and delivering the San Francisco News on the campus. Later he started a laundry agency, calling for the bags of soiled laundry and delivering the bundles himself.

In 1893, Herbert Hoover got a job with the United States Geological society. He had natural ability at engineering. That together with the habit of work, gained rapid progress for him. He became nationally known as a successful engineer and a business man. In 1928 he became President of the United States.

Herbert Hoover was born with no silver spoon. Orphaned early, he had to fight for every bit of knowledge, for every opportunity. But Herbert Hoover was born with the habit of work, and he had the good luck to keep that habit. His reward was success.

When King George Received the Big News from America

Samuel Morse, inventor of the electric telegraph, had only one ambition as a young man and that was to become an artist. He studied under Washington Allston, then the greatest painter in the United States, and with Allston went to London in 1811. There he met Benjamin West who, although an American, was president of the Royal academy, and a great favorite with the king, who later made him Sir Benjamin West.

West was actually at work on a portrait of the king when the latter was handed the Declaration of Independence. Morse heard the piquant story from West himself, says Ernest Greenwood in "From Amber to Amperes." Here it is—as related by Morse:

Turning to the picture of the king, Sir Benjamin West said:

"Do you see that picture, Mr. Morse? Well, sir, the king was sitting for me when the box containing the American Declaration of Independence was handed to him."

"Indeed!" I answered, "and what appeared to be the emotion of the king? What did he say?"

"Well, sir," said West, "he made a reply characteristic of the goodness of his heart," or words to that effect. "Well," he said, "if they can be happier under the government they have chosen, then under mine, I shall be happy!"

Morse stayed four years in England where he achieved considerable success as a portrait painter. Then returning to his native country, he afterwards became president of the national academy and an eminently successful painter, his sitters becoming so numerous that he was unable to meet and fill all of his orders. It was during his return voyage to America in 1832, following a second visit to Europe, that Morse got his conception of the telegraph. Twelve years later—May 24, 1844—he gave a public demonstration of his invention, sending a message from Washington to Baltimore.

The rest is well known history. —Kansas City Star.

The Scales

WHAT goes up must come down. Or if you wish to put it in more scientific language: Action is equal to reaction and in the contrary direction.

This is the law of compensation. It is the one fixed, immutable law of life and it applies to everything, everywhere. It cannot be evaded or avoided. The working of it may be immediate or it may be a matter of centuries, but if we keep ourselves aware of it we may be saved disappointment and disillusion.

The extent to which we try to restrict that law is absurd. We speak of balanced budgets, balanced rations, and the balance of trade; but we quite ignore balanced lives and balanced sociology; so, in the end, Nature takes the job off our hands, with the consequent upheavals and disturbances.

We work or play to excess, we indulge our appetites and our senses to repletion, perhaps to gluttony, and when we suffer during Nature's work of restoring balance, we rail at fate.

In monarchy and republic we allow our thirst for power and for money to overbalance our lives, both individually and socially, then blame God and man for the chaos which attends the restoration of balance.

In all the affairs of life we may evolve philosophies and devise systems; but just so long as they are out of balance, individually, socially, industrially or governmentally, just so long will the scale teeter up and down to our discomfort.

If as individuals our lives are out of balance, the structure as a whole must also be out of balance; and in time that balance must be restored—by us or by THOSE WHO FOLLOW.—Ray S. Ayers in Detroit News.

A Worthy Object

WILL power is the mental experience exercised in bringing about a desired end. Therefore, I say that a man must necessarily have a worthy object in view to bring out the best in him—that a man must see more than a salary to be more than a salaried man. A man must see the position of ownership, partnership, management, or increased award, in order to awaken his will power.

The man who does good to another does even more good to himself.

Funster Ought to Have Recognized His Fellow

Jones de Vere Jones decided it would be fun to spend a day in the country. Back to Nature, and all that.

Meeting a farmer in a field he thought to have some fun with him.

"Good-morning," he started. "I must say I admire your part of the country."

Then he noticed a scarecrow in the middle of the field.

"And is that one of the oldest inhabitants?" he went on, pointing to the scarecrow.

"Naw, zur," came the slow reply. "That be no oldest 'habitant. Just a visitor like yourself."

First Choice OF FARMERS

FARMERS everywhere are saying that the amazing Firestone Ground Grip Tire is FIRST in performance and FIRST in economy. So many thousands of farmers are changing over to this wonderful tire that production has been greatly increased to meet the demand.

FIRST IN DRAWBAR PULL. The greater drawbar pull of this amazing tire accounts for its ability to do more work in a given time.

FIRST IN TRACTION. The patented Ground Grip Tread takes a deeper bite into the soil. Added strength to resist the strain of heavy pulling is provided by Gum-Dipping the cord body. Every fiber of every cotton cord is saturated with liquid rubber by this patented Firestone process. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread bind the tread and cord body so solidly together that we guarantee they will not separate.

FIRST IN ECONOMY. Saves up to 50% in fuel over steel-lugged wheels. Covers more acres per day. Low-cost Firestone cut-down wheel program permits using one set of tires on several different implements.

FIRST IN SALES. Firestone Ground Grip Tires have such outstanding leadership in performance that sales are soaring. Don't wait another day—see the Firestone Ground Grip Tire today at your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Auto Supply and Service Store.
